"At Enova we are actively working to improve our gender balance. Enova's work is set in a very technical environment but it shouldn't discourage women from applying and making their contributions to our business. Our first vocation is to bring comfort, efficiency, and performance to our clients and also to protect natural resources; perhaps some of women's innate traits could have a real benefit to our success.

As Clara Gaymard, Chairman and CEO of GE France and President of the Women Forum said "The competencies developed when you are [a woman and] a mother: anticipation, ability to listen, goodness are all described in the leadership manuals". It therefore seems only natural and logical that we attract more women to our workforce to bring these characteristics to our team.

With half of the workforce being female and a growing proportion of clients being female as well, we don't want to miss out on this pool of talent - it would be a strategic fail. It is key to have management who are open and continuously foster efficiency, innovation, and equality for all."
